In this first editorial, we would like to thank, first of all, all our readers for their attention.

We present for all of you a new scientific journal, born with the desire to achieve maximum dissemination, with a multidisciplinary vocation, and focused on clinical aspects related to health sciences.

Clinical Advances in Health Research is a scientific journal, dedicated to Health Sciences and Biomedicine, which publishes innovative and advanced scientific results related to health research, which come from high-quality studies and evidence, such as the following: randomized clinical trials, meta-analyses and systematic reviews, as well as others studies: protocols, case series, critical comments, letters to the editor, etc. The research studies we publish are from different areas of knowledge such as the following: Physiotherapy, Nursing, Podiatry, Dentistry, Medicine, Psychology, Nutrition and other disciplines related to Health.

Among our objectives we highlight the following: promotion of health research, international dissemination of the results of health research, updating of knowledge in health sciences and biomedicine, (especially in the clinical field), and promoting culture science in health sciences from a clinical perspective, based on evidence.

In this first issue, we present clinical trial protocols, original research studies and a clinical case report.

We hope you will find it interesting.
